EDITORIAL

With this issue, the '69 Staff bids a tearful adieu to the windswept vortex that tis a privilege to live in and leaves '70 and '71 holding the proverbial bag. In this sad moment of less than one MMC until graduation, we have prepared for you a final rash of trash from the twisted no-minds of '69, having articles for every taste, sweet and sour.

Taking over as editor is Jeff McBriety, a sophomore who has been an Army private, a member of R-Flight, and perennial ac-pro star. We think he'll do a good job, if he doesn't flunk out first. By the way, get those names and résumés for All-Star in to him, % 25th Squadron, ASAP, or there won't be any.

Does anybody want to buy a multi-peaked aluminum tent that sleeps 800?

We don't appreciate another publication's stealing our ideas (e.g., "communication within the Wing", All-Stars of '69), but then we suppose he's not real pleased with having his car title impounded by an irate bank.

As I sit here fingering my PCV Valve I ponder the past and remember that someday, we'll all look back on this and laugh.

Rick

the Dodo Awards

The Second Annual Dodo Awards Ceremony began when T. Abdul Goldstein, Mayor of Colorado Springs, presented Rick Grandjean and Dave Daniel with Keys out of the city, while Jose Iturbe and the Colorado Springs Symphony Orchestra played "The World Turned Upside Down".

HEY, #, LISTEN TO THIS ONE...

For his work as distribution manager, Steve "The Hebe" Edelman proudly accepted the "Golden Pushcart" award, which he promptly hocked for $1.98, cash.

Ken Stevenson, for his outstanding work as joke editor, was presented with five back issues of the Talon.

1969

The "Shut Your Fat Mouth and Hand Me My Quinine Pills" Bitterness Award went to H. Ownby, for being perpetually so.

The entire Dodo staff gratefully presented Captain Zawacki with the rare and coveted "Gluteus Maximus" award for being one of the few willing to put his on the line.

His Majesty Rick Grandjean bestows upon the Right Honourable Jeff McBriety the unspeakably high honor of Dodo Editor, 1969-71. Press on, Ace!

SMUT

Ten years ago the first graduating class ('59) had a small school newspaper with a little column called the "Purple Falcon" which kept track of the doings of some of the more notables on campus. "Smut" would like to give a tip of the hat to its predecessor on this Tenth Anniversary.

On to business!

The committee of officers from the Comm Shop that was set up to discern whether cadets should be allowed to wear gold prop and wings has reached a decision. NO! Reason: too dangerous a possibility that a tradition might start naturally instead of being dictated. What's wrong with your Dad's wings?

Household Goods Shipping Briefing: 30 minutes of sales pitch to come back and be an instructor and 2 hours of explaining how to sign your name on one piece of paper.

Another problem solved - no more of this firsties being late getting their uniforms, we'll make them buy them thru the T-shop. Latest word from the T-shop: the rest of the uni's should get here before 4 June (maybe).

Green Onion Shows Brilliant Exposé Of Intelligence! He put one of those nasty cadets under arrest for impersonating an officer (sounds like the pot calling the kettle black!). Seems this 1^o cadet was driving his dad's car (retired) with a white sticker that had started to peel and some of the old blue sticker was showing through. Stay tuned - there's more! This is the second officer impersonation the Green Onion has exposed -- the first was for the same dude who hung his 2nd Lt. bars on his mess dress 100th night. Keep up that Naval Academy tradition there, Greeny.

Next comes a little tidbit from that old stockbroker himself. It appears that this dool popped off to old second group about not knowing the name of a 2^o dude that had used the group phone, so when the dool corrected himself what else could old second group do but sap the 2^o dude for "endangering the career of a fourthclassman".

Bought any good uranium stock lately? 2^o beware. Big Brother has already started gate checks of all temporary tags. Get out your pencils kiddies, we're going to have a quiz!

1. Who gets the money for using the chapel in the Alcoa Aluminum ads?
2. Who gets the money for using cadets in that certain Clearasil ad?
3. Who gets the money for using good ol USAFA for the Lucy show?
4. What was that rule about not using ol USAFA in any way for a commercial reason?

WHOOOPS! Here comes the OIC and the SOB!
Good-bye - for good!

Two miniskirted Coeds were strolling through beautiful downtown C-Springs when they noticed two cadets following them.

"Aren't those cadets out after hours?" one said.
"I certainly hope so!," replied her friend.

As he stopped his new 'vette off a well secluded road, the cadet asked his date,
"If I try to make love to you, will you yell for help?"
"Only if you need it." replied his date.

One restricted firstie has announced the discovery of a sure cure for hangovers:
keep drinking!
"I suppose," snarled the iron-can AOC to the Firstie, "That when you graduate, you'll wait for me to die, just so you can spit on my grave!"
"Not me sir," said the cadet, "When I leave here, I never want to stand in a long line again."

Opportunity Knocks

"Cheer up...," said one cadet to his roommate after he got a Bear John, "There are plenty of other fish in the sea."
"Yeah," said his roommate, "But I think the last one got all of my bait!"

A CONCISE HISTORY OF THE DODO '57-'69

On 16 May 1957, Cadet J.M. Reeves began what he felt would become one of the outstanding campus newspapers in the nation. Unfortunately, somewhere along the line his weekly mimeographed newsletter, called the Dodo, went wrong and ended up as the whatchamacallit that it is today. How did this impetuous fore-runner of the true Cadet magazine evolve into the present publication? Forthwith is the answer:

Cadet Reeves' features included the Purple Falcon, the "Smut" of yesteryear, and "True Course-Career" by Dave Goodrich, now a major in the Poli Sci Department. There was very little humorous content, no girls and no photos. It was truly a newsletter, with a title block like:

George Hines, '60, took over the reins from Reeves, continuing his news theme and format, then passing it on to Pat Wynne of '61. Wynne produced the first Dodo that somewhat resembled the present magazine, although there was still much serious material in it. In September of 1961, Mike Regnier of '63 inherited the publication and gave us the first Girl of the Month. On 13 October 61, a new title block appeared, drawn by Mike Ditmore of '65, one of the best artists in Dodo history. Ditmore provided the present style bird and gave us the fractions on their chests, intended as a parody on Mach 1.

Regnier was the first to use humorous covers and for a while used stationery type letterheads. Dave Samuel of '64 followed Regnier, adding innovations like the Spacemate, Dots and Doodles, the weird way of printing the word "Dodo" that we do, and the almost complete transition to a humor magazine. Dave Connaughton of '65 continued Samuel's excellent tradition, then passes it on to whom we consider to be the Master Editor, John McFalls of '66. McFalls' rare sense of humor made his issues collectors' items, and he gave us the present letterhead, ads on back covers, and a keen insight to the funny side of our life here. Mel Greene took over for '67 and the Dodo almost went into hibernation, with poor art and articles; he had few people to help him, and when Bill Radasky took over for '68, the rag had become a Fifth Squadron publication. Bill was another rare mind and produced some outstanding issues. When Dave Daniel joined the staff, the art quality rose a few thousand per cent. The next year, we took over and tried to make the Dodo more representative of the wing, both in staff and articles. The editor felt that a simple humor magazine should serve other interests besides entertainment, such as providing otherwise unheard feedback up the chain. So now you know how we went from a newsletter to a humor/spokesman publication, and how we'll probably go to hurried scrawls on the back of forms 0-96.

The legend of the unicorn has tickled the fancy of sportsmen since before Pliny. An admirer of purity, the unicorn can only be lured into the open by exposing a virgin to his view (see Marguis de Sade, Varouse and Assurdrie Uses for Virgins). The unicorn will then approach and docilely lay his horn in the virgin's lap. Unicorn lap-capture, or capture by any other means, has been relatively rare in recent years, which may lead one to doubt the existence of unicorns or virgins. You may draw your own conclusion.

DIRTY DEAL of the DAY

← SPLITS! →

Part 1 of the Dodo Dirty Deal of the Day goes to the Cadet Tailor Shop, those jolly trolls who lurk in the nether reaches of the Nugh Catacombs, drinking java merrily and working as little as possible, and especially to their shrewd leader Robbing Hood, who convinced the powers that be that rather than giving all 1^o $300 and requiring them to have all uniform items by 1 May, to give the Merrye Men of ye olde T-shop the dough; now no firsties have their uniforms! Uniformity and Standardization, the watchwords of the day! Also deserving of mention and contributing heavily toward selection for the Award were the usual good fit and outstanding quality (see above). So, our Morry Luxemborgs are off to you, T-Shop; when we re(tire)(sign) we're going to be government ~~rasketees~~ contractors too.

Part 2 of the Conniving Connector goes to that paragon of inspiration in the halls of academe, the little blue-walled lounge housing the Dean and Vice-Dean for their last-ditch success at hazing the Class of '69. Ninety-five young men taking Physics 334 have the enviable opportunity of losing a half-week of extended weekend due to the outstanding average finals schedule of 1,3,10.

"WHAT THIS PLACE REALLY NEEDS ..."

AN EDITORIAL

We've heard that phrase a lot. What do we really need? We say more criticism, but not moaning and groaning; we need constructive criticism, the kind that opens doors and offers practical solutions- not the kind that gets that door slammed in your face.

Most people will admit that this place isn't perfect, but few will take the trouble to try to change it. USAFA is changing, maybe not fast enough, but some progress is being made. We'd like to point out at least one problem area and offer some suggestions.

Perhaps the most noticeable area to us is the example set by our officer corps. The example they set is our only guide to the attributes that an officer should possess, and will determine in part the kind of officer we will become. Some of these men are the finest we could ever hope to have leading us, such as men who have earned the respect, admiration, and obedience of their men. Yet there are others (without mentioning names, as all of us know who they are) who apparently do not believe in earning respect. It is this small group who make us leery of a service career. The "Old School" approach and methods of West Point, OCS and OTS, and ATO's just will not produce career motivated lieutenants. On the contrary, the modern military man is more intelligent, a soldier-scholar, who must question and analyze if he is to be of service to his nation. He must also obey the orders given him, often without question; yet, he must have every assurance that those orders come from rational, competent men. We do not want every single point of every decision explained to us, but we would like to know the reasoning behind some of the more important ones. Maybe we are being optimistic, but we feel that these inflexible men do not fit the mold of the "new" Air Force and therefore will not be permitted to hold a high position within our service. How can one identify the individuals that are making a negative contribution to the mission of the Academy? Look for signs like spending an inordinate amount of time around the Squadron; for talking about one man behind his back, in front of other cadets; for inability to make any decision himself (constantly referring everything to a superior); for being inflexible on minor points (first class finals, postponing a confinement to see a girl who's been planning to see a cadet for months, ad infinitum); for performing the duties of the Cadet Squadron Commander ; for punishing, not correcting (sending a man to a CDB for speeding after he'd been fined $175); for checking and becoming extremely upset over petty trivialities (firsties sleeping between the sheets

These are not generalities, but are specific examples of negative leadership that we see every day. Fortunately, much of this is offset by the efforts of those who are leaders. We are tired of observing so many cadets who hate their AOC's, whom they view as distant dictators striving for high OER's. Could it be that the officer "system" places such a high premium on ER's that a man must disregard the principles of leadership for which he was selected to come here? Or perhaps some are not aware of their influence and sincerely believe they are doing the right thing but are merely misguided? This article is not a bitter indictment of the officer corps- it was written to point out some weaknesses that, if corrected, will make this institution a better place. An officer who proves that he is willing to stick his neck out for his men will have all the respect he needs; "He who feels the respect which is due to others cannot fail to inspire in them respect for himself, while he who feels, and hence manifests disrespect toward others, especially his subordinates, cannot fail to inspire hatred against himself."

Hey kid! If you see yourself in this picture, you need help.

The first winner of the Annual Wing Sweat-Hog Contest is a lovely lass who was submitted by a lad in Fourth Group. Miss Bovine Grunch hails from Tewksbury, Massachusetts, and is rather typical of all the luscious broads that live in the Northeast. She is currently a senior at Loretto Heights College and is under investigation by the Federal Drugs and Narcotics Bureau. We wish all the luck in the world to Bovine!
